Geography and Climate

The Philippines, an archipelago of over 7,000 islands, boasts a diverse geography of lush mountains, vast plains, and stunning coastlines. The islands are volcanic in origin, with rugged mountains, such as Mayon Volcano, and scenic hills, like the Chocolate Hills. The climate is tropical, with three main seasons: the hot and dry summer, the rainy season, and the cool winter. Temperatures range from 20-30°C (68-86°F), with high humidity levels throughout the year. The country is prone to typhoons and earthquakes, but its unique geography also creates a variety of microclimates, making each island a distinct and exciting destination.
