Geography and Climate

China, the world's third-largest country, encompasses a vast and diverse geography, with sprawling mountains, majestic rivers, and expansive deserts. The landscape ranges from the snow-capped Himalayas in the southwest to the scenic coastlines along the East China Sea. China's climate varies greatly, with tropical regions in the south, temperate zones in the east, and cold, arid deserts in the northwest. The country experiences four distinct seasons, with harsh winters in the north and milder winters in the south, while summers can be hot and humid, especially in the eastern coastal regions.
